

Limfjordslandet	Danmark/Nordtyskland	Norden	England/Irland	Længere væk
 Kragelund tunic, bog find dated to 1040-1155 is placed in National Museum of Denmark, Kopenhagen. Some information about pattern.  The Moselund Tunic (1050-1150) Denmark	 On the left an indication of the placement of the fragment on the body, and on the right the actual find on display in the Wikinger Museum Haithabu. http://histvarld.historiska.se/histvarld/draekter/draekter.html  On the left the actual find on display in the Wikinger Museum Haithabu, in the middle an indication of the placement of the fragment on the body, and on the right the museum reconstruction of the upper part of the apron. The diagram that I used to make the pattern for my apron dress, which can be found here http://histvarld.historiska.se/histvarld/draekter/draekter.html	 Herjolfsnæs		 This is why my viking underdress is pleated- people keep asking me. Pleated linen fragment (neckline of a serk) from the Pskov grave
	 Sprang replica of a Danish Iron Age hair net; wool raised, spun and plaited

One of the two hair nets found in the grave of the Borum Eshøj woman, dated to early Bronze Age.

Embroidery from the Tenth Century Viking Grave at Mammen, Denmark

Woven textile found in the Oseberg boat mound grave in the county of Vestfold, Norway. Dates to 834 C.E. Photograph from Saamiblog

LONDON.- Leather bikini briefs from the 1st century AD discovered during excavations on London Queen Street in 1953 [...] The type and size of stretch marks across the front suggest that they were worn by a teenage girl, possibly for acrobatics or as everyday under-clothing or even a sanitary garment, according to the Museum of London.	